
Subject: Cancun

Posted by Earle Martin on Thu, 12 Jan 2012 15:05:12 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I have some experience from way back when, but it might only be worth what I am charging you for it. I haven't flown into Mexico for almost nine years, primarily because I am flying charter and did not do enough international flying to want to comply with TSA requirements. You should verify anything I say here, but it was true for me some years ago.

You can depart the US from any airstrip. You obviously have to file a flight plan and (back when) Customs wanted some communication that you were leaving the US for your destination. TSA may require APIS filing outbound?

When you say "direct", you can go nonstop to Cancun (at one time only four or so Mexican airports were open 24 hours, I think Cancun was one) but you would need to follow airways/jet routes and dust off your position reporting skills when non-radar. Weather sources for the Gulf should include satellite photos and winds aloft depictions.

Cancun airport people should be pretty tourist-friendly. At a minimum I would tip everyone. In my last years of flying declared charters into Mexico I started using handlers and passing the costs ($$$) through to the customers. A private flight should be easier; handler or no handler, that is the question.

I always made sure every last "i" was dotted and every last "t" crossed when I went to Mexico. I didn't want to give them any excuse to gig me for more $. Often when some document misspells my name "Earl" instead of "Earle" I just let the typo go. On documents I would show the Mexicans (permits or insurance certificate) if it said "Earl" I would send it back to the issuer to refine every detail.

[quote] ----- Original Message -----

From: kurt langseth (kurtflies12@cablelynx.com)

To: MU-2 Mailing List (mu2list@mu-2aopa.com)

Sent: Thursday, January 12, 2012 8:23 AM

Subject: [MU-2 list] Cancun

Does anyone have any experience with flying into Cancun from the Gulf coast area? From my home airport (GGG) it is 800 miles and about 2:45 flt time of which 2:00 is over the water 8-(. Can I make a direct flight from a non-customs airport? Where can I get weather for the Gulf?
Thanks Kurt
